- Data

Cross cutting themes

- Capacity building
- Gender mainstreaming
- Communication

- “Research into Use” rather than analysis alone
- To fill gaps through secondary analysis and carefully chosen primary research
- Combine conventional approaches (logframe and M&E) with a behavioural change model (outcome mapping/theory of change).
- Allows us to plan from outset – who will use our findings, what form they are required in and what research and analysis is needed
- This approach recognises complexity and non-linearity of policy change; shaped by multiple actors and processes.
- Our RPC can aim to influence change rather than have change attributed to it.
